

WHO LET THE WORDS OUT?

I know a thing that might make you laugh:
a coffee-cup holder is called a 'zarf'.

Here's something else that I deem rather fine:
the prong on a fork is called a 'tine'.

When it comes to odd words there are plenty of cases:
an 'aglet' is tubing attached to your laces;

when pieces of paper are what you desire the sensible thing is to order a 'quire';

and how about this, it's pretty spectacular:
eating your breakfast is rather 'jentacular'.

Words can be 'sterling' and words can be 'antic';
when words are let loose they can be 'corybantic'

so next time you learn of a word such as 'ruddled' you'd best look it up so you don't get 'befuddled'.
