THE DAY DEATH DIED

To Rod, who told this story so brilliantly

Jack and his mum lived by the sea.

Mum was ill. Each day, she got worse.
She got thin. Went to bed early. She got up later and later.

One morning, she didn't get up at all.

There was a knock at the door. Who could it be?

"I've come for your mum," the stranger said.

Jack knew the stranger. It was Death.

“No!” yelled Jack. “No! No! You’re not taking her!”

Jack grabbed a broom and hit Death hard. Again. Again!

It was very odd. Each time Jack hit Death, Death got smaller. And smaller. And smaller.
