

Malachy Doyle

The HOUND of ULSTER

Illustrated by Erin Brown

BLOOMSBURY

The HOUND of
ULSTER

BLOOMSBURY EDUCATION
Bloomsbury Publishing Plc
50 Bedford Square, London, WC1B 3DP, UK
29 Earlsfort Terrace, Dublin 2, Ireland

BLOOMSBURY, BLOOMSBURY EDUCATION and the Diana logo are trademarks of Bloomsbury Publishing Plc

First published in Great Britain in 2007 by A & C Black, an imprint of Bloomsbury Publishing Plc

This edition published in Great Britain in 2021 by Bloomsbury Publishing Plc

Text copyright © Malachy Doyle, 2007
Illustrations copyright © Erin Brown, 2021

Malachy Doyle and Erin Brown have asserted their rights under the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act, 1988, to be identified as Author and Illustrator of this work

Bloomsbury Publishing Plc does not have any control over, or responsibility for, any third-party websites referred to or in this book. All internet addresses given in this book were correct at the time of going to press. The author and publisher regret any inconvenience caused if addresses have changed or sites have ceased to exist, but can accept no responsibility for any such changes

This is a work of fiction. Names and characters are the product of the author's imagination and any resemblance to actual persons, living or dead, is entirely coincidental.

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or any information storage or retrieval system, without prior permission in writing from the publishers

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

PB: 978-1-4729-8996-3; ePDF: 978-1-4729-8993-2; ePub: 978-1-4729-8995-6

2 4 6 8 10 9 7 5 3 1

Printed and bound by CPI Group (UK) Ltd, Croydon, CR20 4YY

To find out more about our authors and books visit www.bloomsbury.com and sign up for our newsletters

The HOUND of ULSTER

Malachy Doyle
Illustrated by Erin Brown

BLOOMSBURY EDUCATION
LONDON OXFORD NEW YORK NEW DELHI SYDNEY

To Louis Isaac Cuchulainn, he of the bark most tuneful

Contents

Setanta's Dream	7
The Young Warriors	16
Big Talk	26
Setanta and the Beast	38
Cuchulainn	47

Chapter One

Setanta's Dream

Setanta always liked to dream big.

“I’m going to be famous,” he boasted to his mother, when he was only six years old. “I’m going to be a Red Branch Knight!”

“Don’t be silly, child,” said his mother, laughing. “For one thing you’re too young, for a second you’re too small and for a third we can’t afford weapons.”

Setanta was sad, then, but his mother put her arm around him. “Only the children of nobles become warriors, love,” she told him. “The great king of Ulster, Conor Mac Nessa, would never have one such as you! You’ll grow up to be a shepherd, like the rest of our family. Now fetch me some wood for the fire and put such thoughts from your mind.”

But Setanta wouldn't give up on his dream. His father often spoke of the band of young people that the king had brought together at Emain Macha, the Red Branch headquarters, to train up as his champions. The young warriors were great hurlers, and specially chosen for their skill at games and sports.

So Setanta made himself a hurley stick from the branch of an ash tree, and found a round stone to use as a ball. As well as the hurley, he made himself a javelin and a spear, a shield and a sword, and he spent every free moment practising, until he was sure that he was just as good as the famous band of young warriors.

Then, one night, when his father was preparing to take their sheep down to the market in Emain Macha, Setanta crept up behind him.

“Could I go with you tomorrow, Father?” he asked.

“It’s too far, child,” said the man. “You’ll get tired, and I’ll have to carry you.”

“I won’t,” said Setanta. “I can run for miles.”

“It’s too busy,” said his father. “I’ll lose you in the crowd.”

“You won’t,” said Setanta. “I’ll stay close by.”

“I’ve too much to do,” said his father. “It’s hard enough work keeping the sheep together, without having to watch out for a rascal like you.”

But Setanta's mother took pity on him. "Oh, let him go with you! He'll have to learn how to drive the sheep one day, so now's as good a time as any."

Setanta ran over and hugged her, for this was the moment he'd been dreaming of.

He hardly got a wink of sleep all night and, by the first light of dawn, when his father came to wake him, he was already up and dressed.

They had a quick bite to eat, gathered the sheep, and set off on their way. It was a long journey, sure enough, but Setanta ran on ahead of the flock, playing at games to shorten the way.

He whacked a stone into the air with his hurley, as high and hard as he could, tossing the stick after it. Running forward, he caught the hurley, held it out and trapped the stone on it. The whole way to Emain Macha, Setanta did this. He never tired and he never dropped the stone, not once.

When they arrived in the town, Setanta saw the king's warriors, every one of them, practising their skills on the green. So, with a whoop and a holler, he ran to join them.

For now was the time to prove that the child of a shepherd was good enough to become a warrior of the mighty king.