WELCOME THIS BOOK!

Our lives matter. This book is a love letter to our ancestors and to the next generation of black changemakers, in the spirit of the song "To Be Young, Gifted, and Black."

The iconic song was written by one of the musicians in this book, Nina Simone. She dedicated it to her friend, Lorraine Hansberry—the first black woman to write a Broadway play. She wrote the song as a tribute to Lorraine's speech "The Nation Needs Your Gifts," which she gave to young black creative writers.

When I first started writing, I was unsure about sharing my stories publicly. My late grandfather, who was born in 1911 and grew up in a segregated community, came to me in a dream. He said: "Go to New York. Write. Write the books you needed when you were younger." He saw what I could be, before I could understand the depths of my potential.

For Andrea, the experience of illustrating this book while expecting a baby boy crystallized the importance of books that show people who look like him. We wish for every child who encounters Young, Gifted and Black to know that the world needs your "gifts," that they are more than enough, and that we see your greatness today, tomorrow, and beyond.

We both believe in the power of creating what we need to see. The books we read and the media we consume deeply influence our understanding of who we are and what we can be—if you can't see it you can't be it. They also impact how we understand each other. And although a lot has changed since Lorraine's speech and Nina's song were written, the stories in movies, in school, and on television often show a limited view of the achievements and stories of people of color. All children deserve to see themselves represented positively in stories. That's why we're highlighting the talent and contributions of black changemakers from around the world—for readers of all backgrounds to discover.

This book is a beginning and not an end. We're inviting you on a journey through time, across borders, and even through space (with astronaut Mae Jemison!) that provides a small but mighty snapshot of the infinite amount of celebrated and unsung heroes worldwide, including yourselves and the people you care about.

Let's look to the lessons of the past while imagining what's possible when we dare to be bold. While each of the 52 visionary leaders we've highlighted has unique strengths and have endured various heartbreaks and triumphs, they share their fearless pursuit of the dreams they had as a child.

We hope that you're just as encouraged by the artists, activists, doers, makers, healers, and dreamers who bravely paved the way for us to have a brighter future.

Jamia Wilson & Andrea Pippins

Mov. 23, 1805 - MAY 14, 1881 KINGSTON, JAMAICA Heroine of the Crimean War, Mary Seacole, pioneered as a NURSE who cared for British soldiers at the battlefront.

As a child, young Mary learned about Caribbean medicine from her mother, a free black Jamaican woman. A natural healer, she practiced nursing dolls and pets before tending to humans.

By 1854, Mary was living in London when the suffering of soldiers in the Crimean War went public. At the start of the war, her application to join Florence Nightingale's nursing team was rejected—like many others who were refused due to their race or class. Determined to help, Mary put her nursing skills to use and went to war at her own expense.

In 1855, she built the British Hotel near Balaclava to care for injured soldiers. She helped contain the cholera outbreak by distributing remedies in hospitals on the Crimean frontlines.

Although she passed away in 1881, "Mother Seacole" is remembered for bravely running a business, kindly caring for ill and injured warriors, and defying discrimination during an era where black women's rights were limited.

Matthew Alexander Henson was the first African-American Arctic EXPLORER. He made six voyages over the course of 18 years.

Born to poor tenant farmers who passed away during his childhood, Matthew became a dishwasher at Janey's Home-Cooked Meals Café to support himself when he was about eleven years old. One of his favorite parts of the work was learning about the customers' lives. He was especially interested in sailors and any interesting voyages.

At 12, he walked forty miles from his home to Baltimore to work on a merchant boat. Once he was hired, he learned how to read and write from the ship's captain. Always adventurous, Matthew sailed all around the world.

AUGUST 8, 1866-MARCH 9, 1955 · NANJEMOY, MARYLAND · USA

}0°

In 1890, he joined voyager Robert Peary's first Arctic expedition across the northern tip of Greenland. He went on to cover almost 10,000 miles on dogsleds across Greenland and Canada.

Matthew's team made history by becoming the first explorers to reach the North Pole in 1909. Matthew declared, "I think I'm the first man to sit on top of the world."

AUGUST 24, 1972 LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA ••••USA ••••

Ava DuVernay was the first black female FILM DIRECTOR to win a Golden Globe Award, and the first African American to win Best Director at the 2012 Sundance Film Festival.

As a child, Ava grew up near Compton, a mostly black and Latino city in southern Los Angeles. Throughout the school year, she attended an all-girls Catholic school, and discovered her love of movies while watching films with her Aunt Denise.

×

Ava often visited her father's childhood home in Hayneville, Alabama during summer vacations. Later, Duvernay said that trips to her father's hometown inspired her Oscar nominated film Selma, about marches for voter equality in the 1960s.

As a publicist turned filmmaker, Duvernay attributes her success to creativity and determination. She advises aspiring directors to "Be passionate and move forward with gusto every single hour of every single day until you reach your goal.

Bessie Coleman was an AIRSHOW PILOT, and the first African American and Native American to stage a public flight.

0

PILOT

LICENSE

One of thirteen kids, Bessie trekked for four hours a day to her one-room school in Texas. Always a high flyer, she excelled at mathematics and reading. When she wasn't studying, she helped out on her family farm and attended church. Her determination and drive led to her gaining a place at Langston University in Oklahoma. But college fees were expensive, and Bessie had to leave after completing only one semester.

0

JANUARY 26, 1892-APRIL 30, 1926 ATLANTA, TEXAS · USA

At 23, Bessie heard stories from World War One pilots during her job as a manicurist. Their adventures inspired her. Since U.S. flight schools denied women and blacks entry, Bessie became a licensed pilot in France. Although a crash ended the aviator's dream of opening a school for black fliers, her legacy continues. Mae Jemison, the first black female astronaut in space, brought a photo of "Brave Bessie" on her first mission.

as the 44TH PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. He was the nation's first African American President.

JANUARY 17, 1964 CHICAGO, ILLINOIS · USA

AUGUST 4, 1961 HONOLULU, HAWAII · USA

Barack Obama was born to a Kenyan economist and an American anthropologist in Honolulu, Hawaii. He spent his childhood attending school and playing basketball in Hawaii and Indonesia. His experiences growing up in Catholic and Muslim schools expanded his worldview, he said "I benefited from a multiplicity of cultures that all fed me.

Barack studied at Occidental College, Columbia University. After graduation, he went on to work as a community organizer in Chicago before enrolling at Harvard Law School. After this, he worked as a civil rights lawyer and professor, penned Dreams of My Father, a personal story about race and identity, and served as a Senator in Illinois.

His commitment to public service and grassroots organizing secured his two election victories as president.

Michelle Obama is a LAWYER who served as the 44TH FIRST LADY OF THE UNITED STATES (FLOTUS). She pioneered as the first African American FLOTUS.

Michelle LaVaughn Robinson was born and raised in Chicago's South Side. She lived in a tiny bungalow with her parents and her older brother. As a part of a supportive family who valued reading and education, both Michelle and her brother moved forward a grade at school.

Her academic excellence brought her to Chicago's first magnet school for gifted kids, where she graduated as salutatorian. She went on to study at Princeton and Harvard Law School. She said "For me, education was power."

Michelle worked as a lawyer, city administrator, and a community outreach professional. As First Lady, she became known as a riveting public speaker, fashion icon, and advocate for military families, health, and wellness causes.

Barack and Michelle Obama have been married since 1992 and have two daughters called Malia and Sasha.

CHIMAMANDA BEDTEMBER 15, 1977 - ENUGU, NIGERIA

Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie is a MacArthur Genius Grant AWARD WINNING AUTHOR. Her writing has been translated into 30 languages.

Chimamanda grew up in Enugu, southeast Nigeria, as one of six children. Her father was a statistics professor and her mother was the University of Nigeria's first woman registrar. Chimamanda began reading when she was four, and started writing as soon as she could spell.

The majority of the books she read in her early life focused on British and American characters, who didn't reflect her reality in Nigeria. Although these books influenced her early writing, she says her discovery of African authors helped her "Realize that people who looked like me could live in books." This inspired her to amplify her distinct cultural voice.

Famous for her lectures and writing about gender equality and the value of diverse storytelling, the author of We Should All Be Feminists and Americanah, opens minds one story at a time.

As the sixth fastest woman of all time, Cathy Freeman made headlines for being a CHAMPIONSHIP SPRINTER.

CATHY FREEMAN

FEBRUARY 16, 1973 SLADE POINT, MACKAY AUSTRALIA

When Cathy Freeman's family noticed her running talent, her mother urged her to develop her skill. A member of the Kuku Yalanji people, Cathy faced hardship due to economic instability and racial discrimination. In primary school, she was denied medals that were given to white girls she surpassed on the field.

Despite roadblocks, she persisted: "You got to try and reach for the stars or try and achieve the unreachable." A scholarship positioned her to compete at the National School Championships. This paved the way for wins in the Australian National Championships and the World Junior Games.

Cathy made history as the first indigenous Australian to compete in the Olympics. Her trailblazing activity raised awareness about issues impacting indigenous people. When she won the gold in 2000, she ran her victory lap barefoot as a tribute to her heritage.